

It seems to me that the FCC has no valid position to force XM radio to refrain from its broadcast of local weather and traffic. Subscribers using XM radio pay for the service of XM radio and like myself, I am sure many users find great value in local weather and traffic on XM. As long as we live in the free market of the United States, the government should let the free market have its freedom to challenge AM/FM broadcasters to keep up with the listeners needs and preferences or fall behind and follow the darwinian law embraced by the free america. If AM/FM provide an inferior service, listeners should have every right to pay to hear things the way they want to. Last time I checked, we were not a communist country, lets not become one.
